Compendium of the World's Languages: Ladakhi to Zuni George L. Campbell,2000 Many languages particularly those which have achieved literary status have been studied in great detail and specialized descriptions of these are plentiful What has not been so readily available however is a general survey covering a wide spectrum of the world's languages on a comparative basis It is this kind of comparative cross section of languages ranging from the familiar and well documented to the relatively obscure that the Compendium of the World's Languages presents Performing Commemoration Annegret Fauser,Michael A. Figueroa,2020-10-07 Public commemorations of various kinds are an important part of how groups large and small acknowledge and process injustices and tragic events Performing Commemoration Musical Reenactment and the Politics of Trauma looks at the roles music can play in public commemorations of traumatic events that range from the Armenian genocide and World War I to contemporary violence in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the sayhername protests Whose version of a traumatic historical event gets told is always a complicated question and music adds further layers to this complexity particularly music without words The three sections of this collection look at different facets of musical commemorations and reenactments focusing on how music can mediate but also intensify responses to social injustice how reenactments and their use of music are shifting and not always toward greater social effectiveness and how claims for musical authenticity are politicized in various ways By engaging with critical theory around memory studies and performance studies the contributors to this volume explore social justice in and through music Causatives and Causation Jae Jung Song,2014-06-11 Causatives and Causation is the first comprehensive study of causative constructions found in the world's languages This important new research based on a data base of more than 600 languages not only investigates fully the richness and variety of causative types but also presents an alternative perspective to the traditional typological approach The new typology enables a better understanding of how the human mind cognizes causation and how this is reflected in language Causatives and Causation is also an important attempt to integrate language typology with diachrony by constructing a diachronic model of causative affixes on the basis of this new typology Drawing on the theoretical insight of Role and Reference Grammar this book provides a case study of the causative constructions in Korean providing additional support for both the proposed new typology and the diachronic model It also examines the pragmatic foundations of causatives an important but previously unexplored area of study The Turkish Dialects of Trabzon: Analysis

Bernt Brendemoen, 2002 The dialects spoken in Trabzon on the Eastern Black Sea Coast are the Anatolian dialects that have preserved the most archaic features At the same time they are the ones that display the greatest number of innovations due to the influence of other languages in the region The archaisms indicate that the first speakers of Turkish must have settled in the area more than a hundred years before the Ottoman conquest i e in the 14th century although historical sources give no information on Turkish settlements at that time The main aim of this study is to analyze the Trabzon dialects synchronically and diachronically and to explain the features that distinguish them from other Anatolian dialects The study also makes a hypothesis about the turkization of the area The second volume contains dialect texts which constitute the material for the analyses in the first volume These texts which have been recorded and transcribed by the author are provided with numerous foot notes and give a unique impression of the folkloristic and historical richness of the region
