Social Innovations For Development:

Social Innovations for Development C. G. Hedén, A. S. King, 2016-07-29 Social Innovations for Development focuses on the need for the advancement of social innovations relative to the progress of science and technology. The selection is composed of works of authors who have conducted research on the need to enhance social innovations and cope with the advancement of science and technology, particularly how these areas affect institutions, social and government structures, and humankind as a whole. The book stresses world trends that require institutional change and the need to institute innovation in the structures and procedures of government. The text also offers a discussion on the history of social change. Along with this discussion are remarks and suggestions on how to transform social innovations from theory to action. As the world develops, the need to put up social inventions to facilitate the adoption of technical inventions is stressed. With this pointed out, the work of the International Foundation for Social Innovation is highlighted. In the research to establish the connection between technological and social innovation, the role of international prizes is of great value. Thus, specific areas for awards and incentives are discussed. The book is a vital source of information for those interested in establishing the relationship of social innovations with the advancement of science and technology. Strategies and Best Practices in Social Innovation

Marta Peris-Ortiz, Jaime Alonso Gómez, Patricia Marquez, 2018-05-31 This book examines the different ways companies can develop and design social innovation. Combining technological and social perspectives, the contributors present emerging research on social innovation from different sectors such as entrepreneurship, education, and energy. Collectively, the authors demonstrate the ways in which social innovation can drive sustainability and development in regions around the world. All societies are characterized by their political, economic, and social institutions, as well as by how they utilize technology. The social innovations with the highest importance are those which modify existing institutions or create new ones, and based on their magnitude, they can be considered as radical or incremental. For example, when Joseph Chamberlain encouraged workers to organize in order to achieve universal male suffrage in Great Britain in 1885, this was considered a radical innovation for British society, which in turn changed its political framework. Social innovations may be based on intelligence and commitment on technology or on social entrepreneurship in its most open forms. In addition, social innovations can be classified into those which correspond to an entire country or region, a field (e.g., education) or a sector (e.g., entrepreneurship, technology, social reform). Featuring contributions on topics such as agro-food, smart cities, higher education, gender equality, and sports, this book is ideal for academics, students, scholars, professionals, and policy makers in the areas of innovation, entrepreneurship, sustainability, and regional development. Social Innovation and Territorial Development Diana

What to Make of Social Innovation? Towards a Framework for Policy Development Carlo Borzaga, Riccardo Bodini, 2012 Over the past few years there has been a growing interest on the part of the scientific community and more recently of policy makers in the concept of social innovation The notion of social innovation is particularly appealing in light of the difficulties facing traditional welfare systems and more broadly a development model essentially based on only two actors the market and the state that is finding it increasingly difficult to meet the growing and diversified needs of society However the uses and definitions of the concept are so disparate that it is becoming increasingly difficult to assess whether social innovation is in fact a helpful construct or just another fad that will soon be forgotten This paper focuses in particular on the usefulness of the concept of social innovation for the purposes of policy development Therefore the goal is not to find the true definition of social innovation Rather it is to search for a useful framework on which to build sound policies that could tackle the complex social issues that have caused scholars and practitioners to pay attention to social innovation in the first place Building on a review of the literature and in particular on a paper by Eduardo Pol and Simon Ville we propose an approach that recognizes a degree of overlap between social innovation and business innovation and argue that social innovation policy should focus on the subset of social innovation that does not overlap with business innovation This is due to the fact that social innovations that overlap with business innovations tend to be profitable and as such the market is amply equipped to supply them perhaps with the support of existing business innovation policies Pure social innovations on the other hand are not driven by a profit motive and thus need either to be subsidized or to be developed by enterprise types that are not motivated by profit maximization Indeed by focusing on the characteristics of different enterprise types we find that not for profit enterprises with an explicit social mission are ideally suited to develop pure social innovation even in the absence of public sector intervention The paper then concludes that targeted policies should be more mindful of the role of different types of enterprise in generating social innovation and more broadly that the debate on social innovation should be more closely aligned with the debate on the pluralism of enterprise forms

People-Centered Social Innovation Swati Banerjee, Stephen Carney, Lars Hulgard, 2019-07-10 Social Innovation is emerging as an alternate interdisciplinary development pathway of knowledge and practice that aims to understand and address contemporary complexities and multi dimensional social realities BEPA 2011 defines social innovation as innovations that are social in both their ends and means However though Social Innovation is a widely used term its conceptual understanding and the specific relation to social change remains under explored People Centered Social Innovation Global perspectives on an Emerging Paradigm attempts to revisit and extend the existing understanding of Social Innovation in practice by focusing upon the lived realities of marginalized groups and communities The emerging field of people centered development is placed in dialogue with theory and concepts from the more established field of social innovation to create a new approach one that adopts a global perspective engaging with very different experiences of marginality across the global north and south Theoretically People Centered Social Innovation Global Perspectives on an Emerging Paradigm draws upon northern understandings of change and improvement as well as southern theory concerns for epistemological diversity and meaning making The result is an experiment aimed at reimagining research and practice that seriously needs to center the actor in processes of social transformation scarcity ageing societies and climate change All of these issues demand substantial continuous and sustainable structural change to maintain international competitiveness Social change can only be understood by improving our knowledge about the impact of innovation processes in their co evolutionary alliance with social evolution The purpose of this book is to increase awareness of social participation among civil society organisations SMEs governments and research institutions in order to promote economic political and social changes that enhance collective welfare This volume offers a key starting point for those looking to further explore this important realm of social research
