

Writing a Story For Adults

You can be creative when writing a story and write about anything, but it's important to follow a particular structure, and to use connectors and the appropriate verb forms for coherence.

Story Example:

	Rental Confusion
	It all started when Olive quit her stressful job. On the 2 nd of March, she made a reservation, packed her things, and drove to a charming house in a small village on the French coast.
	Although she had left the house at 11:00, it was completely dark by the time she arrived. Even though she made some very confusing , and completely opposite the house. When she got to it , she thought the housekeeper had left her key from under the doormat as instructed, but she was struck by a woman shouting , "Who are you?" She ended up staying in the wrong house.
	In the end, she found the right apartment and eventually felt at home.

Activity 1: Layout of the Story

What are the main parts of a story? Read the explanation below, and write the name of each part in the corresponding gap in the story below.

Title It should attract the reader's attention of the story. You can get creative here, but don't write anything too long, as the reader's time is going to be short.	Introduction or Exposition This is the beginning of the story, where you provide some context and introduce the main characters and setting for what is coming next.
Action or Development (Main Paragraphs) This part usually consists of one or two paragraphs. It's where the story develops, and the characters face and overcome problems or obstacles.	Resolution or Ending This should be a short paragraph describing how the situation is resolved and concluding the story.
