

Microbial stress response and adaptation are complex phenomena, involving both genetic and physiological mechanisms. The response to stress is often mediated by a network of signaling pathways, including the heat shock response, which is activated by the presence of unfolded proteins in the endoplasmic reticulum. This response involves the activation of heat shock factor 1 (HSF1), which then binds to heat shock elements (HSEs) in the DNA, leading to the transcription of heat shock proteins (HSPs). HSPs act as molecular chaperones, assisting in protein folding and preventing aggregation. Other stress responses include the oxidative stress response, which involves the activation of antioxidant enzymes like superoxide dismutase and catalase, and the DNA damage response, which involves the activation of DNA repair pathways. The integration of these various responses allows the cell to maintain homeostasis and survive under adverse conditions.

This diagram illustrates the cellular structure of the olfactory epithelium. It shows a cross-section with the following labeled components:

- Olfactory mature fibers: The axons of olfactory receptor cells extending through the bone.
- Bone: The bony layer through which the olfactory fibers pass.
- Olfactory epithelium: The overall tissue layer shown.
- Basal lamina: The boundary between the epithelium and the underlying bone.
- Olfactory gland: A cluster of cells located beneath the basal lamina.
- Basal cell: A small, dark-stained cell at the base of the epithelium.
- Olfactory receptor cell: A large, columnar cell with a bulbous base and a long apical process.
- Supporting cell: A smaller, more rounded cell adjacent to the receptor cells.
- Olfactory cilia: The hair-like structures extending from the apical surface of the receptor cells into the mucus layer.
- Basal lamina layer: The thin layer separating the epithelium from the bone.

Chlorine dioxide in the blood stream is then produced by the effluxory glands, then bound to oxygen molecules on the effluxory cells. The oxygen potential that is produced results along the stream to the effluxory cells, which sends the signal to the higher brain centers. Unlike other senses, the effluxory responses are connected directly to the central system, rather than through the thalamus to the cerebral cortex.

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neuron and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse arrives at the tip of the axon, the terminal traffic station ("synapse") specialized called neurotransmitters. These highly specialized chemicals carry nerve impulses across the synaptic cleft between the axon and the adjacent neuron or cell, either initiating or activating neural impulses in the target cell.
