Morgan,1989-01-01 The ten countries which border the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden depend to varying degrees on the area for their fish supplies with some countries such as South Yemen being totally dependent on the fish resources while to others such as Israel and Jordan the area is of minor importance Catches of all fish species have been increasing slowly in recent years and in 1986 totalled 60 9 thousand tons from the Red Sea and 99 4 thousand tons from the Gulf of Aden After reviewing the resource assessment and survey work which has been carried out in the area it was concluded that further increases in landings could be achieved on a sustainable basis However such increases will come from the development of new fisheries and the expansion of the areas presently Fished rather than from traditional fisheries which are in general fully exploited Utilization and marketing problems particularly with small pelagic and mesopelagic species however need to be addressed for the full potential of the area to be realized      Assessment, management and future directions for coastal fisheries in Asian countries Silvestre, G. et al,2003-12-08 In Asia the fisheries sector is important in terms of food security livelihoods and foreign exchange earnings However as in many parts of the world there are signs that capture fisheries are fully exploited or overfished Management of fisheries in the region is often hampered by lack of information on the status of fisheries in terms of biological social economic policy and governance aspects This regional project documents an alarming decline on coastal fishery resources based on historic research surveys in South and Southeast Asia Socio economic analyses and policy reviews highlight the importance of the fisheries sector but also the challenges facing it

Potential interventions to improve fisheries management in the countries are outlined and defined with environmental socioeconomic and institutional objectives
