

North European Textile Production and Trade in the 1st Millenium AD

— A Research Project

by LISE BENDER JØRGENSEN

Owing to the fact that an outstanding collection of prehistoric textiles has been preserved in the country, Danish archaeology has a long tradition of textile studies. At the National Museum in Copenhagen are preserved no less than seven complete costumes of the Early Bronze Age – something no other European museum can rival. In addition many Iron Age garments have been found in bogs, giving altogether an unequalled wealth of these highly perishable and therefore very rare objects. They are not only the best possible showpieces, but also are an important source of information on prehistoric weaving and textile production.

The prehistoric costumes found in Denmark have been thoroughly published. No less than three volumes of the series Nordiske Fortidsminder are largely devoted to the description and evaluation of textiles (Broholm and Hald 1935, 1939; Hald 1950). The important textile collections of Sweden, Norway, and north Germany are in the same position (Geijer 1938, Hougen 1935, Schlöbner 1976). Nevertheless our knowledge of the overall development of prehistoric cloth production and trade has been rather limited. The Egtved, Huldremose or Thorsbjerg costumes, to name only a few of the most famous, are beautiful and important pieces, but their value as archaeological sources is limited so long as we cannot relate them to the normal textiles of the time
