Ilocano Irrigation Henry T. Lewis,2019-09-30 This volume examines some of the major factors social demographic and environmental that account for the success of communal irrigation in Ilocos Norte and by implication its absence in adjacent areas other parts of the Philippines and more widely in other parts of insular Southeast Asia However whether this explanation accounts for all the factors involved or even adequately weighs those that are here discussed is secondary to the main concern of this volume corporate groups What zanjeras irrigation societies show are repeated examples of how individual farmers working in concert developed and employed corporate principles to the solution of a common goal or problem It is a kind of solution that has been widely and effectively employed in much of human history Foreign

The Origins of Japan's Modern Forests

Conrad Totman,2019-09-30 The woodlands of Japan vary substantially from north to south and the patterns of their use and abuse differed from area to area during the Edo or early modern period 1600 1868 Nevertheless the basic characteristics and rhythms of forest history were common to all of Japan except the sparsely populated northern island of Hokkaid It is possible therefore to illuminate the general experience by scrutinizing a section of the whole The section selected here is Akita a prefecture of northern Japan whose forests are among the nation s most famous Three considerations make this choice attractive The topic has clearly delineated boundaries largely because the Akita region was a single coherent political unit during the Edo period the documentation on the early modern forest situation there is extensive and accessible finally and as a consequence of the second factor Japanese scholars have already published excellent studies on key aspects of Akita forestry These factors have made this a relatively convenient area to examine and discuss in the short compass of this study
