

Story 1

As she waited for her sister by the main door of the sports centre, Mae looked up at the clock. It had just gone 8pm. Outside, the dark night was illuminated only by the weak light from a lamp post. She could hear the wind whistling around the edge of the building. Mae shivered. Just then, Sue appeared at the end of the corridor.

"There you are Sue!" called Mae. "I was wondering where you were. It's getting late, we need to get home."

"Sorry" replied Sue. "I was just grabbing my sports kit."

"Let's go. I don't fancy being out late tonight."

Sue responded, gently teasing her sister "That's just because it's Halloween - you know that ghosts aren't real don't you?"

"Yes, of course" Mae retorted, smiling briefly, "but something just feels..." she paused "odd tonight. I can't explain it."

The chill wind hit them as they went out into the night. The snow, which had been falling heavily earlier, crunched beneath their feet - the moonlight casting long, eerie shadows on its surface. Chatting as they walked, the teenagers didn't notice that they had passed their usual turning. As they approached an unfamiliar piece of road, Mae stopped abruptly. "We've missed the turn-off. We should turn around and go back."

"Oh, that will take ages" complained Sue. "Why don't we take a short cut across the park over there - we'll end up on the right road if we do that. We'll be home in no time."

Mae looked at her uneasily. "Are you sure?"

Linking arms with her, Sue answered, "Come on, we'll be fine. It will be much quicker than turning round. I'll make sure the ghosts don't get us" she added jokingly. Mae gave her an unsure smile in return.
