Sustainable Coastal Management and Climate Adaptation R. A. Kenchington, Richard Kenchington, Laura Stocker, David Wood, 2012 Australians are famous for our love of the coast although in many places this love has caused serious and often irreversible impacts The sustainable management of our society's many uses of the coast is complex and challenging While a wealth of knowledge exists about the coast this is not always brought to bear on decision making Coastal management to date has had limited success and in some cases interventions have made problems worse This book explores the evolution of coastal management and provides critical insights into contemporary experience and understanding of coastal management in Australia Towards Coastal Resilience and Sustainability C. Patrick Heidkamp, John Morrissey, 2018-09-28 Coastal zones represent a frontline in the battle for sustainability as coastal communities face unprecedented economic challenges Coastal ecosystems are subject to overuse loss of resilience and increased vulnerability This book aims to interrogate the multi scalar complexities in creating a more sustainable coastal zone Sustainability transitions are geographical processes which happen in situated particular places However much contemporary discussion of transition is either aspatial or based on implicit assumptions about spatial homogeneity This book addresses these limitations through an examination of socio technological transitions with an explicitly spatial focus in the context of the coastal zone The book begins by focusing on theoretical understandings of transition processes specific to the coastal zone and includes detailed empirical case studies The second half of the book appraises governance initiatives in coastal zones and their efficacy The authors conclude with an implicit theme of social and environmental justice in coastal sustainability transitions Research will be of interest to practitioners academics and decision makers active in the sphere of coastal sustainability The multi disciplinary nature encourages accessibility for individuals working in the fields of Economic Geography Regional Development Public Policy and Planning Environmental Studies Social Geography and Sociology Sustainable Coastal Management and Climate Adaptation Richard Kenchington, David Wood, Laura Stocker, 2012-09-06 Australians are famous for our love of the coast although in many places this love has caused serious and often irreversible impacts The sustainable management of our society's many uses of the coast is complex and challenging While a wealth of knowledge exists about the coast this is not always brought to bear on decision making Coastal management to date has had limited success and in some cases interventions have made problems worse Australia's coast has been shaped by severe events such as cyclones and floods with climate change now increasing the number and intensity of these hazards In addition our coastal populations are growing and with them our social environmental and economic vulnerability to such hazards This book explores the evolution of coastal management and provides critical insights into contemporary experience and understanding of coastal management in Australia It draws on contemporary theory and lessons from case examples to highlight the roles of research and community engagement in coastal management The book concludes with a chapter of recommendations which can help guide coastal management and research around the world

Tools and Criteria for Sustainable Coastal Ecosystem Management Lars Håkanson, Andreas C. Bryhn, 2008-04-20 The aim of this book is to discuss practically useful operational bioindicators for sustainable coastal management criteria for coastal area sensitivity to eutrophication and an approach set a biological value of coastal areas These bioindicators should meet defined criteria for practical usefulness e g they should be simple to understand and apply to managers and scientists with different educational backgrounds Central aspects for this book concern effect load sensitivity analyses One and the same nutrient loading may cause different effects in coastal areas of different sensitivity Remedial measures should be carried out in a cost effective manner and this book discusses methods and criteria for this Remedial strategies should generally focus on phosphorus rather than nitrogen because the effects of nitrogen reductions can rarely be predicted well and nitrogen reductions may favour the bloom of harmful cyanobacteria Three case studies exemplify the practical use of the bioindicators and concepts discussed in the book The first concerns how local emissions of nutrients affect the receiving waters when all important nutrient fluxes are accounted for The second concerns how to find reference values for good ecological status to set targets for remedial actions The third gives a reconstruction of eutrophication If the development during the last 100 years can be understood key prerequisites to turn the development would be at hand This book should attract considerable interest from researchers in marine ecology consultants and administrators interested in management and studies of coastal systems

Managed Realignment : A Viable Long-Term Coastal Management Strategy? Luciana S. Esteves, 2014-07-14 Managed realignment has been a preferred coastal management strategy in England in the 21st century and has also been increasingly implemented elsewhere Climate change and environmental and financial concerns have led to a shift from the traditional hold the line approach of coastal protection towards more flexible soft engineering options Managed realignment is a relatively new soft engineering alternative aiming to provide sustainable flood risk management with added environmental and socio economic benefits by creating space for coastal habitats to develop more dynamically The natural adaptive capacity of coastal habitats and the ecosystem services they provide underpin the sustainability of managed realignment However many definitions of managed realignment exist and the understanding of what the term actually represents in practice has evolved through time and varies regionally This book clarifies the definitions and terminology used in the literature and proposes that managed realignment is used as a general term that encompasses the many different methods of implementation worldwide including removal breach and realignment of defences controlled tidal restoration which includes regulated tidal exchange and controlled reduced tide and managed retreat These methods of implementation are explained and illustrated with examples from around the world In addition to a general overview of emerging policies and current practices specific chapters discuss approaches adopted in different locations including the Netherlands the UK and Maui USA The UK experience is presented from the perspectives of three sectors the National Trust a charity organisation that owns 10% of the coastline of England and Wales the Environment Agency the organisation responsible for implementing government policy concerning flood and erosion risk and a private consultant involved in the planning design and delivery of managed realignment projects Taking a wider perspective to consider the range of implementation methods the viability of managed realignment as a long term coastal management strategy is discussed Recent national and regional strategies worldwide give managed realignment an increasing role in climate change and flood risk management Gaining stakeholders and public support is fundamental for the success of emerging coastal management strategies However public perception and stakeholders engagement are often cited as a factor limiting the wider uptake of managed realignment Results from a recent survey are used to benchmark the current thinking about the potential the performance and the limitations of managed realignment in the UK and elsewhere Current opinions about managed realignment are often not clearly defined partly due to many projects being relatively recent There is a general perception of great potential to provide sustainable flood risk management with added environmental benefits However the views of stakeholders are considerably more negative and notably contrast with the views of practitioners and researchers The only clear and dominant agreement across all groups of respondents is that better understanding about the long term evolution of sites is needed
