Introduction to Smart eHealth

and eCare Technologies Sari Merilampi, Andrew Sirkka, 2016-11-18 Both the demographics and lack of resources in the health and well being industry are increasingly forcing us to find alternative solutions for individualized health and social care. In an effort to address this issue, smart technologies present enormous potential in solving this challenge. This book strives to enhance communication and collaboration between technology and health and social care sectors. The reader will receive an extensive overview of the possibilities of various technologies in care sectors including ICT, electronics, automation, and sensor technology, written by experts from various countries. It will prove extremely useful for engineers developing well being related systems, software, or other devices that can be used by professionals working with people with specialist needs, well being and health service providers, educators teaching related courses, and upper level undergraduate students and graduate students studying related topics. The technology focus of the book is widespread and addresses elderly care and hospitals, in addition to solutions for various user groups, devices, and technologies. Beyond serving as a resource for nurses and people working in the care sector, the book is also meant to give guidelines for engineers developing person centered systems by exploring the integration of these technologies into service systems.

The Sustainability of Health Care Systems in Europe Badi H. Baltagi, Francesco Moscone, 2021-03-22 This volume contains an Open Access Chapter. This book provides a comprehensive understanding of the sustainability of health systems in Europe. Furthermore, it includes an introduction on how EU action in supporting health care policies in the EU Member States, both looking at implemented actions and describing current priorities for the future.

Towards a European Labour Identity Michael Whittall, Herman Knudsen, Fred Huijgen, 2007-05-07 Since 1996 a growing number of European employees have access to a European works council (EWC), a transnational employee body designed to complement national forms of labour representation. This volume brings together a hive of contributors who present valuable new insights into how employee representatives from different European countries perform their jobs as members of European Works Councils in an attempt to develop some sense of a common European labour identity. The transnational character of the EWC makes it an ideal microscopic structure through which the wider discourse surrounding identity, especially when associated with globalization, Europeanization, and mobility, can occur. Towards a European Labour Identity examines not only the workings of the EWCs, utilising individual case studies, but also analyses and assesses the link with the broader discussions on European identity, as well as European trade union coordination and solidarity.
