Abstract The present work based on an implement classification system for Arab Complaint. The basis of this system is the construction of Decision Support Systems, Text Mining, and Rough Set, a specialized semantic approach of correlation which is referred to as the model of ASN for creating semantic structure between all document's words. A particular semantic weight represents true significance of this term in the text after each feature is probable to be utilized the semantic selection of a suggested feature based on 2 threshold values, the first being the maximum weight in a document and the other one representing the characteristic having the maximum semantic scale with the first one of the thresholds. The task of classification in the stage of testing depends on the dependency degree concept in the raw group theory than before to treat all the characteristics of every one of the classes that results from the stage of training as particular condition rules and therefore, considered in the lower rounding group. The outputs of this classification system are sufficient, performance is quite good persuasive, and assessment of this the system through measurement precision.

Keywords: text-mining, text classification, decision support system.

1. Introduction

Underwriting is considered as a very critical task for all companies. During years, data maintenance can either be performed in systems of legacy or in hard-copy files for the transactions of underwriting. Systems of legacy were modeled more for the sake of connecting workflow than for harvesting knowledge about transaction of underwriting, which makes the accessibility to data underwriting onerous and manual. With the advancements in the technology, there is a variety of new means for data extraction. With the progress that the data extraction capability has witnessed, there has been a maturing and counter-weighting idea that not every historical data which may be improved is actually related to what one needs or wants (Ryan, 2015).

The basic motive for more efficient performance is growing beyond trivial computations to analytics and business intelligence fields. Typically, underwriting examination factor is combined with data for enhancing the abilities of the predictive analytics. The underwriting process's complexity was enhanced as data increased. A decision support system is needed, and that may play the role of underwriter and it has to be sufficiently capable for making decisions according to trained data (Samaneh, 2013).
