Statistical Methods for Food Science
John A. Bower, 2013-09-23 The recording and analysis of food data are becoming increasingly sophisticated Consequently the food scientist in industry or at study faces the task of using and understanding statistical methods Statistics is often viewed as a difficult subject and is often avoided because of its complexity and a lack of specific application to the requirements of food science This situation is changing there is now much material on multivariate applications for the more advanced reader but a case exists for a univariate approach aimed at the non statistician This second edition of Statistical Methods for Food Science provides a source text on accessible statistical procedures for the food scientist and is aimed at professionals and students in food laboratories where analytical instrumental and sensory data are gathered and require some form of summary and analysis before interpretation. It is suitable for the food analyst, the sensory scientist and the product developer and others who work in food related disciplines involving consumer survey investigations will also find many sections of use. There is an emphasis on a hands on approach and worked examples using computer software packages and the minimum of mathematical formulae are included. The book is based on the experience and practice of a scientist engaged for many years in research and teaching of analytical and sensory food science at undergraduate and post graduate level. This revised and updated second edition is accompanied by a new companion website giving the reader access to the datasets and Excel spreadsheets featured in the book. Sensory Evaluation of Food Harry T. Lawless, Hildegard Heymann, 2010-09-27. The field of sensory science has grown exponentially since the publication of the previous version of this work. Fifteen years ago the journal Food Quality and Preference was fairly new. Now it holds an eminent position as a venue for research on sensory test methods among many other topics. Hundreds of articles relevant to sensory testing have appeared in that and in other journals such as the Journal of Sensory Studies. Knowledge of the intricate cellular processes in chemoreception as well as their genetic basis has undergone nothing less than a revolution culminating in the award of the Nobel Prize to Buck and Axel in 2004 for their discovery of the olfactory receptor gene super family. Advances in statistical methodology have accelerated as well. Sensometrics meetings are now vigorous and well attended annual events. Ideas like Thurstonian modeling were not widely embraced 15 years ago but now seem to be part of the everyday thought process of many sensory scientists. And yet some things stay the same. Sensory testing will always involve human participants. Humans are tough measuring instruments to work with. They come with varying degrees of acumen, training, experiences, differing genetic equipment, sensory capabilities and of course different preferences. Human foibles and their associated error variance will continue to place a limitation on sensory tests and actionable results. Reducing, controlling, partitioning and explaining error variance are all at the heart of good test methods and practices.

Statistics for Sensory and Consumer Science Tormod Næs, Per Bruun Brockhoff, Oliver Tomic, 2011-06-20. As we move further into the 21st Century, sensory and consumer studies continue to develop, playing an important role in food science and industry. These studies are crucial for understanding the relation between food properties on one side and human liking and buying behaviour on the other. This book by a group of established scientists gives a comprehensive up to date overview of the most common statistical methods for handling data from both trained sensory panels and consumer studies of food. It presents the topic in two distinct sections: problem orientated Part I and method orientated Part II, making it appropriate for people at different levels with respect to their statistical skills. This book successfully makes a clear distinction between studies using a trained sensory panel and studies using consumers. Concentrates on experimental studies with focus on how sensory assessors or consumers perceive and assess various products.

properties Focuses on relationships between methods and techniques and on considering all of them as special cases of more general statistical methodologies It is assumed that the reader has a basic knowledge of statistics and the most important data collection methods within sensory and consumer science This text is aimed at food scientists and food engineers working in research and industry as well as food science students at master and PhD level In addition applied statisticians with special interest in food science will also find relevant information within the book Sensory and Consumer Research in Food Product Design and Development Howard R. Moskowitz, Jacqueline H. Beckley, Anna V. A. Resurreccion, 2009-03-03 The food and beverage industries today face an intensely competitive business environment To the degree that the product developer and marketer as well as general business manager can more fully understand the consumer and target development and marketing efforts their business will be more successful Sensory and Consumer Research in Food Product Design and Development is the first book to present from the business viewpoint the critical issues faced by sensory analysts product developers and market researchers in the food and beverage arena The book s unique perspective stems from the author team of Moskowitz Beckley and Resurreccion three leading practitioners in the field who each combines an academic and business acumen The beginning reader will be introduced to systematic experimentation at the very early stages to newly emerging methods for data acquisition knowledge development and to points of view employed by successful food and beverage companies The advanced reader will find new ideas backed up by illustrative case histories to provide yet another perspective on commonly encountered problems and their practical solutions Aimed toward all aspects of the food and beverage industry Sensory and Consumer Research in Food Product Design and Development is especially important for those professionals involved in the early stages of product development where business opportunity is often the greatest
