

AN INTRODUCTORY GUIDE TO PUTTING RESEARCH INTO PRACTICE

4. Finding new evidence – research design

Alan Borthwick, Lisa Farnon and Jackie Campbell

Conventionally, designs for research studies are divided into two categories: quantitative and qualitative. As will be seen later, the research design used should follow from the research question and ensure that data are collected and analysed in a way that will answer that question. However, the form that the research question takes is largely a function of underlying philosophy and of why the question is being asked in the first place.

This article examines the main types of philosophical research stances as these underpin the resulting research methodologies. The main characteristics of quantitative and qualitative designs are outlined and, finally, some of the main research designs are described.

RESEARCH PHILOSOPHIES

The main models of enquiry used are the positivist and the interpretative models.

The positivist model:

- The natural science model
- Based on testing theories and hypotheses
- Insists on objectivity and neutrality - avoidance of personal bias
- Researcher controls the theoretical framework, sampling frames and the structure of the research
- Theory/concepts developed before data collection - seeks to falsify the initial hypothesis
- Favours quantitative methods

The interpretative model

- Has its roots in philosophy, history, anthropology etc
- Approach centres on interpretation and creation of meaning by human beings
- Accepts subjective reality
- Looks at understanding rather than explanation
- Context is crucial
- Researchers are reflexive, not objective
- Favours qualitative methods

QUANTITATIVE VS QUALITATIVE DESIGNS

The investigation of new knowledge can be approached in many ways. The approach taken depends on the nature and type of the research problem and the philosophical stance of the researcher (amongst other things). The most important thing, however, is that the methods should be chosen to answer the research question.

There is also a link between research design and analytical methods. Future articles in this series will focus on
