

Surface Preparation and Microscopy of Materials

BRIAN BOUSFIELD

Buehler Europe Ltd, Coventry, UK

This book is the first of its kind, dedicated to the systematic preparation of a vast range of material surfaces and looking in detail at the problem of microstructural traceability. Designed to be of practical use, the book has been written in two parts. In the first part, the book systematically defines the essential procedures involved in surface preparation. Early chapters discuss sectioning, grinding and polishing to develop an understanding of the various factors that need to be considered in the preparation of different types of surfaces. Having established how to prepare a specimen, the second part of the book looks at the best use of microscopy by discussing, in depth, the different features which contribute to informative analysis. Topics covered include objective aberrations, how to improve images, illumination systems and interference, as well as general photomicrographical techniques.

Complete with stunning colour photomicrographs and fully illustrated throughout, this book provides an essential reference for researchers and technicians who require a comprehensive overview of microstructural analysis.

The Publisher gratefully acknowledges the support of Buehler Ltd in the production of this book.
