Teacher Motivation and Retention in Ghana Kwabena N. Bame,1991 Education Reforms in Ghana G. M.

Osei,2010 The decision to undertake this research was a pragmatic response to the debates which followed the introduction of a new innovative secondary education system in Ghana This book investigates the innovation during its formation since 1974 inception from 1987 and in respect of field research aspects of its operation from 1998 to 2002 The primary aim of the research was to monitor the implementation processes in as many aspects as possible This was done in order to see what benefits might be gained and what lessons in order to continue the innovation In order to conduct this assessment it was necessary to examine critically the characteristics of each element of the reform and their implications using a variety of research methods to generate relevant data This approach yielded a substantial amount of original evidence on the dynamics of educational change While this evaluation specifically helps to deepen understanding of the said innovation it also makes a contribution to the literature on educational innovation in developing countries Papers from the International

Osei,2009 The prospect of redistributing power from central government offices to local actors and organisations has repeatedly tantalised academics politicians and policy makers promulgating decentralisation measures in hopes that such action would cure the social and economic ills faced by their policies Education planners in Accra regarded decentralisation as an important strategy for raising the quality and status of Ghanaian education The Ministry of Education MOE was depending on the local content curriculum LCC to achieve many things As MOE officials observed however the success or failure of the reform essentially depended on the actions of classroom teachers Even if plans for the reform were carefully designed and communicated by experts in Accra goals for the reform would not be met unless teachers implemented the reform as envisioned by its authors When the Ghanaian government enacted the LCC reform it was depending on classroom teachers to take a leading role in the process of educational decentralisation The one goal that all members of the system appeared to have most thoroughly absorbed was the notion that as a result of the changes outlined in LCC policy documents the curriculum in Ghanaian schools should more closely mesh with local conditions St Aquinas junior high school a private Catholic institution was the only school I visited where teachers were willing to question and modify policies created in Accra Rather than obediently follow instructions from Accra St Aquinas employees reshaped MOE policies to meet their own educational philosophies and objectives My research indicates that the MOE has not yet commenced to rebuild the culture of education to fit the new vision of teaching and learning it is promoting Instead it is attempting to append the LCC reform to an existing core with only minor modifications A Knowledge Base for Teacher Education and Development:
