An Introduction to Cognitive Optometry Nazir Brelvi,2007 Dr Brelvi a SUNY Optometry graduate and an 18 year veteran of Clinical Optometry throws down the gauntlet to the next generation of Vision Therapy clinicians not only in the US but also around the world He challenges them to adopt a much needed optometric model in the Cognitive Neurosciences in order to effectively address the burgeoning fields of Autism various Neurological Dysfunctions and Learning Disabilities According to

Dr Brelvi the frontiers of scientific discovery are defined as much by the tools available for clinical observation and monitoring as by conceptual innovation Optometrists or Optometric physicians have historically studied the visual system in toto to understand the subtle nuances associated with a spectrum of learning disabilities Dr Brelvi feels that the time is now ripe for Optometry to broaden its scientific horizons and venture into the Cognitive realm of neurological dysfunctions By introducing the new discipline of Cognitive Optometry Dr Brelvi envisions fellow clinicians to recognize the key role played by the visual system in the complex process of cognition which gives rise to the gift of sentience in modern Homo sapiens In his view what marks Cognitive Optometry as an emerging discipline in the Neuro Clinical Sciences is the study of anomalous mental activity as a visual information processing problem It rests on the premise that our perceptions thoughts and social behavior depend on the ability of the visual system to evaluate and collate sensory information correctly Perceptual representations taking place in various regions of the brain need to be translated into successful goal oriented behavior in afflicted patients to help lead more productive and rewarding lifestyles
