

A detailed wood carving of a bear, likely a grizzly or brown bear, is the central focus. The bear is shown in a walking or standing pose, facing right. It is carved from a light-colored wood, possibly basswood, and is placed on a dark, polished wooden surface. The carving is highly detailed, showing the bear's fur texture, ears, and facial features. A large pile of wood shavings is scattered in front of the bear, indicating the process of carving. Two carving knives with wooden handles and metal blades are also visible in the foreground, resting on the wooden surface. A teal circular graphic on the left contains the text "WOOD CARVING BASICS".

Isn't that how our lives sometimes end up looking as we drift through our roles? We want a lagoon and we end up with an iceberg. What are we going to do then? Be a victim and whine. Passively adapt to the cold. Consider that an iceberg isn't that bad after all. Or engage as the true Pilot of our life and set it back on track. Which attitudes do we need to develop to ensure that we'll achieve the results that we want? What do we need to make the systems we share with others effective: teams, organizations, families? What does it cost to be an Engaged Pilot?
