

January

January's Events

We begin 2005 with the Quadrantids comet shower. While it has the potential to be one of the most impressive of the year, with the ability to produce showers of 500+ meteors an hour, it also has a short peak window of roughly six hours – compared with other showers that have peaks of ten days. However, this shower does result in produce bright meteors. The year's peak night is January 3 to 4, and the firestorm around those that night will not wait.

This month we also have four planets to enjoy. Jupiter will be parked high in the sky in the constellation Sagittarius while Mars will cruise past Polaris, the brightest star in the constellation. Gemini, which will be starting to be visible, however will be about 10 degrees from Jupiter in Aries.

In the southwestern sky after sunset, Venus will be shining quite brightly. On Jan. 26, the pair will appear about 2 degrees apart — a great target for those with binoculars.

On January 3, the 4-day old Moon will meet with Venus in the west, separated by about 2 degrees. And the very next day, the Moon will pass close to Saturn, where they will be less than 2 degrees apart.

On January 9, the Moon – which will be waxing gibbous – will be a sight to see as it crosses through the great shield the Pegasus (Messier 42). On January 23, the Moon will trade mid Aquila for a beautiful pairing. On January 31, you can find a very tiny crescent Moon near Saturn low in the west.

The full Moon rises on January 11, and the new Moon occurs on January 28. The Moon reaches perigee (the closest to Earth in its monthly orbit) on January 7 and apogee (the farthest from Earth in its monthly orbit) on January 26.
