

1 How to Start Sailing

Where can you sail?

Britain is rich in places to sail. You will find sailing clubs and boating facilities on many lakes, gravel pits, reservoirs and rivers, as well as in superb coastal sailing areas. You can also take a course during a holiday at a RYA Recognition Centre overseas.

Singlehanded dinghies, like these Picos, are fun to sail and offer a quick way to learn the basics.

Learning in a dinghy is a great way to start sailing. Dinghies have simple equipment, are easy to prepare for sailing, and are light to handle.

They respond quickly to your movements so it's easy to see the effect of your actions and to feel the reaction from the boat. Dinghies used for teaching are usually fairly stable and simple, but they are still rewarding and challenging to sail.

Sailing in a singlehanded dinghy can be the quickest way to learn, but on the other hand, you may enjoy learning with others in a boat designed to be sailed by two or more people; the choice is yours.

The Laser (shown) is typically sailed by two, but takes eight to three.

Keelboats

A keelboat has a weighted keel under the hull which prevents it capsizing.

Keelboats are larger than dinghies and are usually sailed by a number of people. They are stable and dry and often more comfortable to sail.

Because of their greater size and weight they do not offer the fast response and instant feedback of dinghies and the equipment tends to be heavier.

The Viscount (shown) is typical of a day sailing keelboat and is sailed by four people.

Multihulls

Most multihulls are catamarans (two hulls).

Although catamarans and trimarans (three hulls) are very stable compared with dinghies, they can still capsize if allowed to heel (lean over) too far.

The combination of stability and light weight means that multihulls are very fast and offer exhilarating sailing.

Most catamarans are designed to be sailed by two people but there are several types that are sailed singlehanded.

Multihulls require slightly different techniques to boats with a single hull.

The Sun 16 is a very popular catamaran that can be sailed by one or two people.
