

sinners who surround the "Bishop in his rich robes" in "Baptisms and Other Matters," suggest an acceptance of frail humanity. "Respect for Illness" reveals the humor in family life, but it concludes with a note of tight reserve at the impending death of the speaker's mother.

In other poems the speaker tells what is wrong with "blaming the old man" for his children's failings or virtues and movingly leaves his last testament to his seven children. Studying dinosaur pictures in a grandchild's books or reminiscing about his first attempts to swim as a boy, the speaker seems keenly aware of a vast and threatening majesty in the natural world, an engulfing power that almost subsumes our family quarrels and joys. Yet the homely and familiar assert themselves and take their rightful place in the varied texture of mortal life.

The Courage of Judgment: Essays in Criticism, Culture, and Society. By George A. Panichas. Foreword by Austin Warren. Knoxville: The University of Tennessee Press, 1982. Pp. xiii + 303. $24.40.

Reviewed by Marion Montgomery, University of Georgia

Professor Panichas has gathered a collection of his wide-ranging essays on individual writers and on general topics and ideas into a stimulating book. The central concern, as he says in his "Introduction," is "the decline or even the disappearance of the humanistic tradition" brought on by the corrosive shifting of intellectual concerns from "valuation to measurement." His concern as critic (and he distinguishes between the critic and the man of letters) is to rescue the "transcendent and metaphysical constituents of humanism" through the critical virtues of "circumspection, meditation, correction, and conservation." What we have increasingly lost in this century, he argues, is the ethos of the humanistic tradition, its ethical and moral dimension which centers on "the sanctity of human worth." We live in a period of history when human worth is steadily eroded by a perverse emphasis upon adjustment toward mechanistic society. This modernist adjustment to "the democratizing norms of relativity, sentimentalism, expansionism, uniformism, and egalitarianism" reduces the individual toward becoming a cog in society as machine, society deconstructed by reductionists.

To his honor, Panichas assumes a position in defense of critical humanism, so that society may be restored to its lively tradition, recover its proper heritage. He knows that it is a Herculean task, especially since academic criticism in general, "by endorsing the vulgar commercial criticism of the literary marketplace, corroborates and abets the empirical" distortions of humanity. His explicit enemy (and it is mine also) is "the twin tyranny of the secular and the material." Criticism, as Panichas recovers it in his book, repudiates those "canons of a collective, imperialistic mediocrity" which have been used not only to discredit humane letters but to reduce the academy which should foster humane culture to the level of training schools devoted to technique. Against the general tide of this reductionism, he asserts that criticism, if it is to be viable, requires a "confrontation that ultimately rests on the courage of judgment."

One is delighted by the courage in these essays, by the presence of a "combative dissenting criticism" concerned to rescue old values discarded in the
