

Eugene

Story I

Wood is a crucial material for building Cities, but its acquisition is an extremely laborious and time-intensive process. Most lumberjacks do not pick up their axe and head into the forest by choice. Eugene does. He truly enjoys harvesting the forest's bounty.

Eugene is extremely passionate about his work. He's happy to accept demanding tasks and gets rather restless when he is not physically exhausted from work. Rumor has it that Eugene's strange temperament may have much to do with his equally strange past.

Story II

A man like Eugene, who works hard and conducts himself well, is always welcomed in any City. He certainly does love his liquor - but only in his free time. Only the blacksmith has an issue with Eugene - his axes have to be replaced rather frequently. Eugene is stubborn in his choice of tools and has zero interest in trying out more convenient alternatives like the new steam-powered chainsaws. Eugene's first choice would always be those crafted by his drinking buddy Smith, as his axes are the sturdiest and easiest to handle.
