Abstract

The Dinagat Islands hold a large and varied avian fauna with high rate of endemism and species of conservation concern. However, anthropogenic activities pose a grave threat to the avian diversity of these islands. We conducted a three-year (2017–2019) avifaunal survey using mist-nets to inventory the avian species of the islands. We recorded 37 species in 22 families. Seventeen species are Philippine endemic, one species is of conservation concern, and two species are newly recorded from the Dinagat Islands. We also present an annotated checklist of bird species of the Dinagat Islands based on our own surveys, three published studies, and an online database; 246 species in 71 families are included. The results of our study highlight the need for further assessment to conserve the island's avifaunal community, especially with increasing threats of anthropogenic disturbance.

Introduction

The Philippines hosts a rich array of natural habitats leading to a diverse flora and fauna, both in terrestrial and marine ecosystems. The complex biological diversity of the Philippines, coupled with high rates of endemism, is an important component of the Earth's overall biological diversity, such that the Philippines is one of the 17 mega-diverse countries with an estimated total of 52,177 species of which 20,000 species are endemic (Mittermeier et al. 1999 in Ambal et al. 2012; Ong et al. 2002; Posa et al. 2008). The Philippines boasts one of the richest avifaunas in the world, representing almost 6% of the world's total bird species, with 709 species of which 241 are endemic (Achondo et al. 2012; Panopio and Pajaro 2014; Jensen et al. 2020). Moreover, with the increasing monitoring of bird populations as well as in the population of ornithologist and avid bird watchers, new observations
