The Binder39s Road Illumination:

Improved Roadway Illumination: Information Resource Road Illumination Devices Standards Committee,2011 Headlamps should illuminate the traffic scene ahead of the vehicle in such a way that the driver can operate the vehicle safely and in a relaxed manner At the same time negative effects on drivers of other vehicles pedestrians and other people should be minimized Various technical parameters such as beam pattern mounting height headlamp aiming and source spectrum can be tuned to find the necessary compromise The physiology of the vision system under specific night time conditions strongly influences these factors and how headlamps can be best optimized for visibility and comfort The SAE Improved Roadway Illumination task force collected and reviewed relevant research on these topics This document is a comprehensive summary of this information The goal is to enable lighting experts advocacy groups and non experts journalists consumer organizations car drivers to better understand the benefits and tradeoffs of improved roadway lighting with modern headlamp technology It should be noted that all studies can not be included in this report but the intent of this document is to provide the reader with a representative sample of the existing research as a starting point Further this document can be updated in the future to reflect new research findings SAE J2738 has been reaffirmed to comply with the SAE 5 Year Review policy A Guide for the Design of Road Traffic Lights ,1988 Lighting Problems in Highway Traffic Erik Ingelstam,2014-06-20 Lighting Problems in Highway Traffic provides information pertinent to the problems in highway traffic This book discusses a very complicated system of problems of greatest significance for road safety during dark hours Organized into 11 chapters this book begins with an overview of the information capacity of the human eye that is dependent on physiological physical and psychological factors This text then examines the part played by the vision in the driving of vehicles Other chapters consider the visual acuity which varies greatly with the luminance of objects with their contrasts and with the presence of uneven luminosity conditions such as one encounters on the highways This book discusses as well the difference between the illumination concept and the luminance concept in road and street lighting The final chapter deals with the design of lower headlight beams This book is a valuable resource for experts in different fields of lighting research Roadway Lighting Handbook United States. Federal Highway Administration. Office of Traffic Operations,1978 Pedestrian Visibility - Low Beam Optimization to Reduce Night-time Fatalities Road Illumination Devices Standards Committee,2011 The primary purpose of vehicle forward lighting is not to see the world but to see the road In their simplest form headlights help drivers negotiate a safe path on the road They do this by lighting the roadway according to a multitude of specific standards For decades discussions concerning the niceties of illuminating potential obstacles in the roadway were little more than an academic pursuit as there simply were not sufficient lumens available from filament light sources to achieve all of the desired tasks no matter how worthy they might be Not unexpectedly the technology has evolved with the introduction of high output metal halide sources multi task standards combined with multilevel lighting devices and discrete LED sources offering high luminous efficiencies and the means to deliver the light where it can be most useful. The question now becomes one of determining where the available light should be directed. Every standard advisory group, industry manufacturer, and every driver might have their particular favorite approach to the question of how best to illuminate the road, but few would disagree that a single vulnerable set of candidates to benefit from improved forward lighting exist. These are pedestrians walking in the roadway, and unfortunately they can exist literally anywhere in the road scene. Some regions of the road are clearly more perilous than others, specifically those located where the light is weaker on the side of the beam directed toward the opposing lane, the left side in the majority of countries. Work by Sullivan and Flannagan (2001), Kosmatka (2003), and Sullivan (2007) has demonstrated the fatality rate 2300 fatalities and vulnerability twice as many left crossing than right crossing of pedestrians in the roadway. This could lead to the conclusion that it is necessary to put more lumens in the opposing lane, left side of the roadway. However, this is the simple answer; the hard questions are how much light where on the left and how can this be achieved. The low beam pattern by its nature is a compromise between the need to provide adequate illumination of the road ahead of the vehicle while minimizing the effects of glare to oncoming road users. This means that any study to identify improvements in the low beam to achieve better pedestrian visibility must respect the balance between the needs of the vehicle driver and the other road users. While various approaches to reduce pedestrian fatalities are being pursued, it is clear that the effectiveness of headlighting can play an important role. As noted earlier, the performance of the low beam light distribution has improved with the introduction of new headlamp technologies and more efficient light sources. However, the compromise between providing adequate forward illumination while minimizing the effects of glare to the other road users remains a constraint. With research findings providing a clearer indication of the nature of the collisions with pedestrians and identifying critical areas in the road scene, it is now appropriate to review the requirements of the low beam headlamp system with a focus upon mitigating the pedestrian fatalities. The technical report covers technology products or processes which are mature and not likely to change in the foreseeable future.

Roadway Lighting Design Guide American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials, 2005. This guide replaces the 1984 publication entitled An Informational Guide for Roadway Lighting. It has been revised and brought up to date to reflect current practices in roadway lighting. The guide provides a general overview of lighting systems from the point of view of the transportation departments and recommends minimum levels of quality. The guide incorporates the illuminance and luminance design methods but does not include the small target visibility (STV) method. Highway Lighting Reference Guide Street and Highway Safety Lighting Bureau, Safe Highway Lighting Committee, 1958. Road Lighting W.J.M.
