Costner, 1974 Measurements in the Social Sciences Hubert M. Blalock, 1974 Among the frustrations constantly confronting the social scientist are those associated with the general process of measurement. The importance of good measurement has long been recognized in principle but it has often been neglected in practice in many of the social sciences. Now that the methodological tools of multivariate analysis, simultaneous equation estimation and causal modeling are diffused more widely into the social sciences and now that the very serious implications of random and non-random measurement errors are being systematically investigated it is all the more important that social scientists give top priority to the quality of their data and the clarity of their theoretical conceptualizations as well as to methods for analyzing fallible data. This book deals with selected problems of measurement and is written for graduate students and professional social scientists particularly in the technically less developed fields of sociology, political science and anthropology. The book is organized so that in general one proceeds from problems of data collection to those of data analysis. It is not intended to be a complete work covering all types of measurement problems that have arisen in the social sciences. Instead it represents a series of studies of topics that are deemed to be crucial for the advancement of social science research but which have not received sufficient attention in most of the social sciences. The basic purpose is to stimulate further methodological research on measurement and to study the ways in which knowledge that has been accumulated in some fields may be generalized so that it may be applied to others. The book is divided into three major parts. Part I is concerned with applying scaling approaches developed in psychometrics to problems that arise in other social sciences. The focus is on finding better ways to ask questions of respondents so as to raise the level of measurement above that of simple ordinal scales. Part II focuses on multiple indicator theory and strategies as applied to relatively complex models and to change data. In this section the emphasis shifts to how one analyzes fallible data through the construction of explicit measurement error models. Part III deals with the statistical analysis of ordinal data including the interpretation and empirical behaviors of various ordinal measures of association. The final chapter written by the editor discusses how ordered metric assumptions may be used to make more powerful predictions than those characterizing much of contemporary social science. H. M. Blalock Jr. 1926-1991 was Professor, Department of Sociology, the University of Washington, Seattle. He was recipient of the 1973 ASA Samuel Stouffer Prize and was a Fellow of the American Statistical Association and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and is a member of the National Academy of Sciences. He was the 70th president of the American Sociological Association.

Cognition, Aging and Self-Reports Norbert Schwarz, Denise Park, Barbel Knauper, Seymour Sudman, 1998-09-28 First Published in 1998 This book provides a state of the art overview of age related changes in cognitive functioning and explores the implications of these changes for the self report of attitudes and behaviors The contributors are leading researchers in cognitive aging and survey methodology and chapters are written to be accessible to non specialists The first part of the book provides an authoritative review of the current state of cognitive aging research covering topics such as working memory inhibition autobiographical memory metacognition and attention A second section examines the unique issues associated with aging language comprehension and interpersonal communication while the final section reviews research into age related differences in survey responding Of particular interest is how age related changes in cognitive and communicative functioning influence the question answering process in research situations Experimental research illustrates that older and younger respondents are differentially affected by question order question wording and other features of questionnaire design As a result many age related differences in reported attitudes and behaviors may reflect age related differences in the response process rather than differences in respondents actual attitudes or behaviors Implications for research design and psychological theorizing are addressed and practical solutions are offered As such the book will be of interest not only to those in the fields of cognitive aging and gerontology but also to survey methodologists and researchers in public opinion marketing and related fields who rely on respondents answers to questions in their research

Causal Models in Experimental Designs Hubert M. Blalock, 2017 This is a companion volume to the Causal Models in the Social Sciences the majority of articles concern panel designs involving repeated measurements while a smaller cluster involves discussions of how experimental designs may be improved by more explicit attention to causal models All of the papers are concerned with complications that may occur in actual research designs as compared with idealized ones that often become the basis of textbook discussions of design issues In thinking about the revision of that volume considerable literature has accumulated As a result this volume attempts to bridge the gap in time and substance to that earlier effort Blalock examined articles that seemed to hold the most promise of expanding the variety of topics in research methods to the causal modeling approach and addressing the design issues involved The majority of these fell under the heading of panel designs involving repeated measurements a smaller cluster involved discussions of how our understanding of experimental designs could be improved by paying explicit attention to causal models Blalock presented five chapters bearing on experimental designs into Part I since the issues with which they deal are more general than those that treat more specifically with the handling of change data Although many readers may have more immediate interest in these latter papers which appear in Part II Blalock thought it wise to encourage such readers to examine broader issues before plunging specifically into discussions of panel designs

Measurement in the Social Sciences Richard A. Zeller, Edward G. Carmines, 1980-04-30 This textbook is designed to bridge the gap between the theorist and the methodologist by presenting an integrated approach to measurement By differentiating between random and systematic error it conveys both statistical techniques and their theoretical underpinnings essential to students of sociology and political science Rather than developing new technical methods of new theoretical structures Professors Zeller and Carmines provide thorough explanations of the assumptions limitations and interpretations of previously established techniques and theories Written at a level accessible to students of social science with some statistical training the book does not presume a sophisticated mathematical background By concentrating on synthesizing the methodological and theoretical realms Zeller and Carmines demonstrate why measurement considerations are important to research and how measurement principles can be most effectively applied

New Methods in Reading Comprehension Research David E. Kieras, Marcel A. Just, 2018-04-17 Published in 1984 this volume presents methodologies for studying the ongoing psychological processes that occur as a person reads a text as well as discussing the major findings that these methodologies have produced to provide a handbook of reading comprehension research techniques Focusing on the comprehension processes that occur when a person is reading rather than the representation that remains after the text has been read the methodologies use measures such as reading times that reflect ongoing processes rather than relying exclusively on conventional measures of memory performance such as recall These methods make use of computer technology for rapid and flexible stimulus representation and data acquisition This book will allow researchers and students to select appropriate methodologies to investigate a range of fascinating questions about reading comprehension response effects and measurement errors how actually to go about gathering survey data how to avoid missing data and what to do when you cannot and other topics of a similar nature Part 3 considers the analysis of survey data with separate chapters for each of the three major multivariate analysis modes and one chapter on the uses of surveys in monitoring overtime trends This handbook will be valuable both to advanced students and to practicing survey researchers seeking a detailed guide to the major issues in the design and analysis of sample surveys and to current state of the art practices in sample surveys Analyzing Social Interaction Lynn Smith-Lovin,David R.
