

Exponential Growth

Exponential growth is a process where the rate of change is proportional to the current value. It is often represented by the equation $y = a \cdot b^x$, where a is the initial value, b is the growth factor, and x is the time or number of periods.

Exponential Decay

Exponential decay is a process where the rate of change is proportional to the current value, but the value decreases over time. It is often represented by the equation $y = a \cdot b^x$, where a is the initial value, b is the decay factor (less than 1), and x is the time or number of periods.
