"Dear Mr. Durant,—

"It seems to be that the human mind is given to two bad mistakes in its thinking: to forget that our spiritual life is just as real as our physical. Whether or not there is any care to admit that we have a soul, it is a fact that we are equipped with something which generates dreams and ideals, and which sets up values. My own disposition is to believe entirely this human nature which we find without splitting too many hairs as to whether the nature is dual or single. It is natural for us to assume for others as well, to imagine that they will and to worship those ends as our God. It does not disturb me that man's conception of God has changed greatly at different times and in different places.
