

SPECIAL JOURNALS

SPECIAL JOURNALS

We have used the general journal to record all types of business transactions. However, as the transactions of a company increase, there is a need to change to a more efficient and timesaving manner. Accountants have developed an accounting system for an orderly and effective processing of data. They have developed special journals. Each special journal records one particular type of transaction that occurs frequently, such as sales on account, cash receipts, purchases on account, or cash disbursements.

The following are the advantages of using special journals:

1. It saves time in journalizing. Only one line is used for each transaction; usually a full description is not necessary. The amount of writing is reduced because it is not necessary to repeat the account titles printed at the top of the special column or columns.
2. It saves time in posting. Many amounts are posted as column totals rather than individually.
3. It eliminates the detail from the general ledger. The column totals are posted to the general ledger and the details are left in the special journal.
4. It promotes division of labor. Several positions can work simultaneously on the accounting records. This specialization and division of labor pinpoint responsibility and allow for more location of errors.
5. It aids management analysis. The journals themselves can be useful to management in analyzing classes of transactions, such as credit sales, because all similar transactions are in one place.

The special journals are designed to systematize the original recording of major recurring types of transactions. The number and format of the special journals actually used in a company depend primarily on the nature of the company's business transactions. The special journals illustrated on this chapter are the sales, cash receipts, purchases, cash disbursements journals.

- The Sales Journal is used to record all sales of merchandise on account (on credit).
- The Cash Receipts Journal is used to record all inflows or receipts of cash into the business.
- The Purchases Journal is used to record all purchases of merchandise and other items on account (on credit).
- The Cash Disbursements Journal is used to record all payments (or outflows) of cash by the business.

Although we use all these four special journals, the General Journal is still needed. The General Journal is used to record all transactions that cannot be recorded in any one of the special journals. All five of these journals are books of original entry. If a transaction is recorded in the journal, it is posted to the ledger and made part of the accounting records. Therefore, if a transaction
