

Writing Speeches

Opening from "duties of an American citizen" speech by Theodore Roosevelt

Of course, in a sense, the essential first man to be a good citizen is his possession of the home virtues which we think when we call a man by the emphatic adjective of manly. No man can be a good citizen who is not a good husband and good father, who is not honest in its dealings with other men and women, loyal to his friends and fearless in the presence of his enemies, who has not had a sound heart, a healthy mind and a healthy body, just as no amount of attention to civil rights will save a nation where domestic life is undermined, or there is a lack of virtues harsh military alone can ensure the position of a country in the world. In a free republic the ideal citizen must be willing and able to take up arms in defence of the flag, just as the ideal citizen must be the father of many healthy children. A race must be strong and vigorous, it must be a race of good fighters and good breeders, else its wisdom will come to naught and its virtue ineffective, and no sweetness and delicacy, no love and appreciation beauty in art or literature, no capacity for up material prosperity cannot atone for the lack of big manly virtues.
