

in these articles. With individual concerns for profit-and-power outweighing the long term success of societies and environments, the worldwide, market-driven economy brings about increasingly centralized and monopolized ownership of land, resources, money, and, ultimately, power.

In this volume, the authors effectively demonstrate the impacts that social, political, and economic inequalities have on local-level systems. To a lesser extent, they point out where one should be looking in order to change these unequal relations. They paint a complex picture of problems that have led to, and continue to, characterize these types of inequalities. However, no in-depth explorations of practical solutions are provided. Although the primary goal of this volume is to demonstrate the causes of environmental destruction (and these points are well made), it would have provided more balance to the collection if there were to be at least one full article that critically examined a specific case regarding solutions. Whether or not that case was successful or unsuccessful, it still would have allowed the authors to more clearly lay out their vision for how endeavors such as these should proceed, as well as underscore how they have failed in the past. This is a point that Durham overreaches when, in the conclusion he states that "a key implication of these papers is that further research is warranted both to expand the theoretical framework of political ecology and to test its applicability in particular contexts" (p. 262).

There exists no easy solution and no one aspect of the equation can be changed that will subsequently fix the remaining problems. Due to this, the few solutions that the authors do mention remain broad reaching and complex. In part this is because the paradigm of political ecology from which they are operating is still not fully articulated in an anthropological context. It is with some optimism that the authors note the increased application of political ecology since the 1980s. While admiring the attempts of earlier work from the 1960s and 1970s undertaken by such scholars as Clifford Geertz, John Cole, and Eric Wolf, Durham ultimately concludes that "these few case studies fell short of providing analytic tools worthy of a general new approach" (p. 249). In summary, because of its examination of power differentials, as well as its clear and systematic presentation on the introduction of political ecology to anthropology, this volume will prove beneficial for anthropologists and equally useful for geographers, political scientists, environmental scientists, ecologists, and economists alike.

Book Review

The Subsistence Perspective: Beyond The Globalized Economy

Veronika Bennholdt-Thomsen and Maria Mies, New York: Zed Books, 2000.

Reviewed by K. Ravi Srinivas, Madurai, India.

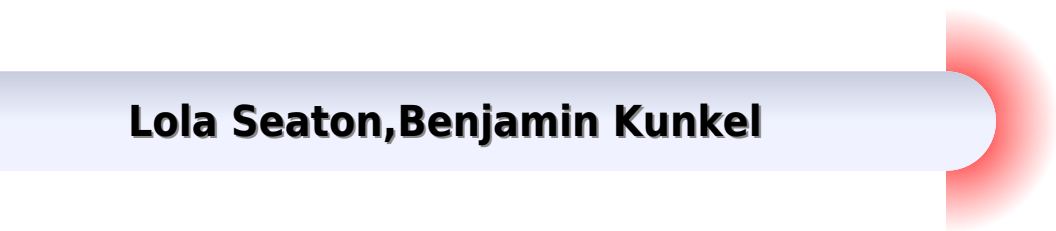

The authors, well known for their work on women and development, call for a radical perspective on globalization and industrial society. They argue that a subsistence perspective is the alternative to the problems created in the name of development. Subsistence is based on the strength of the people and is a perspective that puts nature and peoples' needs before the market and the accumulation of wealth and capital. The authors build on the theoretical basis developed in their earlier works. They argue that traditional responses by trade unions and the left are no answer to the problems of the modern world. Further, they argue that the globalized economy poses new challenges and that the subsistence perspective is the alternative to the globalization, free trade, and the penetration of market forces into every aspect of life.

They point out that, even in the West, subsistence production has a long history. Further, subsistence production continues even today in many parts of the world, particularly in developing nations. According to the authors, "The concept includes many things that are subsumed under head ingrowth as regionalization, local economy, self-sufficiency, new commons, alternative lifestyles, a caring economy, a living economy, the third way" (p. 20). The book is written in support of the subsistence perspective and is also a critique of globalization and the modern industrial society. The authors try to prove that subsistence perspective is not just

Reshaping the University Rauna Kuokkanen, 2011-11-01 In the past few decades the narrow intellectual foundations of the university have come under serious scrutiny Previously marginalized groups have called for improved access to the institution and full inclusion in the curriculum Reshaping the University is a timely thorough and original interrogation of academic practices It moves beyond current analyses of cultural conflicts and discrimination in academic institutions to provide an indigenous postcolonial critique of the modern university Rauna Kuokkanen argues that attempts by universities to be inclusive are unsuccessful because they do not embrace indigenous worldviews Programs established to act as bridges between mainstream and indigenous cultures ignore their ontological and epistemic differences and while offering support and assistance place the responsibility of adapting wholly on the student Indigenous students and staff are expected to leave behind their cultural perspectives and epistemes in order to adopt Western values Reshaping the University advocates a radical shift in the approach to cultural conflicts within the academy and proposes a new logic grounded in principles central to indigenous philosophies

Who Will Build the Ark? Lola Seaton, Benjamin Kunkel, 2023-06-27 What ecological politics should the left propose In Who Will Build the Ark leading radical thinkers debate left alternatives to runaway global heating capitalist crisis and wider environmental breakdown clarifying the stakes in today's key disputes between Green New Deal supporters and proponents of degrowth In a series of landmark texts first published by New Left Review Herman Daly and

Benjamin Kunkel discusses the possibility of an egalitarian steady state economy while Robert Pollin warns against the worldwide slump degrowth could bring and calls instead for a single issue campaign 2 per cent of global GDP dedicated to the switch to renewable energy as the swiftest solution to the emissions crisis Nancy Fraser envisages an eco socialist exit from capitalism's multifold crises while Troy Vettese advocates eco austerity and half earth rewilding Lola Seaton draws out the strategic implications of these contested perspectives in a set of unavoidable green questions In the realm of contemporary politics Alyssa Battistoni writes on the dead end of COP diplomacy C dric Durand asks whether energy shortages will derail the transition away from fossil fuels and Thomas Meaney compares Green New Deal proposals to the pinched reality of Biden's Inflation Reduction Act The world's major powers accept the likelihood of dangerous climate change yet seem incapable of averting it Can radical green models generate the social leverage needed to do so Or as Mike Davis puts it Who will build the Ark

Integral Dynamics Ronnie Lessem, Alexander Schieffer, Samuel D. Rima, 2016-05-23 The theory of integral dynamics is based on the view that the development of individual leaders or entrepreneurs requires the simultaneous development of institutions and societies It seeks a specific way forward for each society fundamentally different from but drawing on its past Nearly every natural science has been transformed from an analytically based approach to a dynamic one now it is time for society and culture to follow suit locally and globally Each culture discipline and person is incomplete and is in need of others in order to develop and evolve This book sets out a curriculum for a new integral trans cultural and trans disciplinary area of study inclusive of but extending beyond economics and enterprise It embraces a trans personal perspective linking self with community enterprise and society and focusing on the vital relationship between local identity and global integrity For the government policy maker the enlightened business practitioner and the student and researcher into economics and enterprise the new discipline is set out here in complete detail by a multi national team of Gower's Transformation and Innovation Series authors Illuminated with examples relating the conceptual to the practical this is a text not for a pre modern modern or even post modern era but for what has been called our trans modern age

Understanding Globalization Robert K. Schaeffer, 2003 This best selling text vividly shows how political and economic changes affect people's lives in different settings around the world Globalization the author argues is not completely new Instead the current wave of globalization builds on international institutions created just after World War II and was given new impetus by policies introduced in the 1970s and 80s The new edition has five new chapters as well as updates and changes throughout Visit our website for sample chapters

Rethinking African Agriculture Goran Hyden, Kazuhiko Sugimura, Tadasu Tsuruta, 2020-07-20 Rethinking African Agriculture argues that rural communities in Africa are still shaped by non agrarian factors both in livelihood strategy and social formation This volume renews and deepens the research on the African peasantry by offering a fresh perspective drawn from the hitherto largely unknown Japanese research on the subject The ethnographic fieldwork focuses not only on the micro environment of the producers but also the broader historical context in which they live and work The contributors argue that in comparison with other regions of the world Africa has never passed through an agrarian revolution that would effectively change the mode of production from within Modernization efforts from the outside have fallen far short of the ambition to transform agriculture in Africa Rural Africa is still largely a natural society characterized by non agrarian features as evident in people s livelihood social organization and farming systems This book will be of interest to social scientists and anthropologists focusing on African development agriculture and agrarian societies

In the Way of Development Mario Blaser,Harvey A. Feit,Glenn McRae,2004 Authored as a result of a remarkable collaboration between indigenous people s own leaders other social activists and scholars from a wide range of disciplines this volume explores what is happening today to indigenous peoples as they are enmeshed almost inevitably in the remorseless expansion of the modern economy and development at the behest of the pressures of the market place and government It is particularly timely given the rise in criticism of free market capitalism generally as well as of development The volume seeks to capture the complex power laden often contradictory features of indigenous agency and relationships It shows how peoples do not just resist or react to the pressures of market and state but also initiate and sustain life projects of their own which embody local history and incorporate plans to improve their social and economic ways of living

Urban Food Production for Ecosocialism Salvatore Engel-Di Mauro,George Martin,2021-09-05 This book explores the critical role of urban food production in strengthening communities and in building ecosocialism It integrates theory and practice drawing on several local case studies from seven countries across four continents China Cuba Ghana Italy Tanzania the UK and the US Research shows that the term urban agriculture overstates the limited food growing potential in cities due to a shortage of land required for growing grains the basic human food staple For this reason the book suggests urban cultivation as an appropriate term which indicates social and political progress achieved through combined labours of urbanites to produce food It examines how these collaborative food growing efforts help raise local social capital foster community organisation and create ecological awareness in order to promote urban food production while also ensuring environmental sustainability This book illustrates how urban cultivation constitutes a potentially important aspect of urban ecosystems as well as offers solutions to current environmental problems It recentres attention to the global South and debunks Eurocentric narratives challenging capitalist commercial food growing regimes and encouraging ecosocialist food growing practices Written in an accessible style this book is recommended reading about an emergent issue which will interest students and scholars of environmental studies geography sociology urban studies politics and economics
